UP, UP & AWAY

Recovering economy means holiday airline ticket prices on the rise

Los Angeles Times

Airline passengers can expect ticket prices to be 7 percent to 18 percent higher this holiday season than last year, as an economic recovery—however modest—spurs growing demand for air travel.

Travelers also can look forward to more crowded flights: The airlines have added few new planes or routes in the past several years.

"I expect prices to be quite high compared to the last couple years, as demand is strong and supply is weak," said Rick Seane, chief executive of the travel website FareCompare.

Already, airlines are packing more passengers per plane, with the nation's top carriers recording 86.3 percent of all seats filled in June—the highest rate in 10 years, according to the U.S. Bureau of Transportation Statistics.

About 41 million Americans are expected to fly during the Thanksgiving and Christmas holiday season, making it one of the busiest travel seasons of the year.

Passengers took advantage of bargains last year, when airlines dropped prices to the lowest levels in decades to entice recession-battered travelers back into the air. But now, travel experts say, demand has begun to pick up, partly a result of pent-up demand and growing optimism about the economy.

"Travel demand for the peak travel days is increasing, driving prices higher as availability diminishes," said Jack E. Richards, president and chief executive of the Pleasant Holidays travel agency.

For example, a nonstop round-trip ticket from L.A. to New York departing the day before Thanksgiving and returning the following Sunday was running in a recent check between $641 and $881 on the major airlines. According to a spokesman for the travel website Expedia, those prices were about 20 percent higher than last year.

The prices are so high that Marilyn Fils, a frequent traveler from Tarzana, Calif., canceled plans to meet her daughter in New York for Christmas.

"I expected somewhat higher prices, that's pretty typical during the holidays, but I was surprised at just how much everything from airlines to hotels had increased," Fils said.

Savvy travelers have some tricks

Los Angeles Times

Some experts are holding out hope that there still may be bargains ahead for holiday travelers. If travelers balk at the higher prices, they suggested, the airlines may offer last-minute discounts to fill empty seats.

THE RECAP

- » Wait to book
- » Travel early
- » Fly off-peak hours
- » Shop around

Jay Johnson, owner of Coastline Travel Advisors in Garden Grove, Calif., said travelers who haven't yet booked a flight should consider waiting awhile because he expects airlines to offer bargain prices if demand drops.

Seats also will be cheaper, Johnson said, if you are willing to travel several days before Thanksgiving or on Christmas Eve.

"At this point, you should either wait or fly on the actual holiday," he said.

Another tip for avoiding higher rates is to book a flight during off-peak hours, such as early in the morning, or fly to a smaller, outlying airport, said George Hobica, founder of the travel website Airfarewatchdog.

"People should not take the first offer they see," he said. "Check the prices several times a day and consider taking alternate airports."

The higher prices signal bad news for travelers but more good news for the airline industry, which has only recently begun to show signs of recovering from the slump in demand after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks and during the global recession.

The U.S. commercial airline industry lost an estimated $58 billion in net income from 2001 to 2009, according to the Air Transport Association, a trade group for the nation's largest airlines.

But times seem to be improving for airlines. The industry reported last month that passenger revenue rose 17 percent in August, marking the eighth consecutive month of growth.

THANKSGIVING TRAVEL COSTS UP

As the nation inches toward economic recovery, demand for air travel is increasing. Holiday travelers can expect to pay about 7 percent to 18 percent more than they did last year. In some cases, much more. TRIBUNE

Keep your cool as it gets colder

As the weather begins to turn cold—sort of—CTA riders should start thinking about adapting their commutes. Going Public has devised a guide to make chilly traveling a breeze.

Hot couture

Hats and coats are not people. They do not deserve their own seats. Likewise, riders should be careful with their wet boots. Try to shake off excess moisture before entering buses and trains so floors don't become slick.

Spray, love

Riders tend to sweat more in heavier clothes. Wear deodorant. Please.

The heat is on

Heat will be available at shelters on CTA platforms starting Nov. 1. If it's not cold, don't take the heat.

Meanwhile, buses have electronic heating and air-conditioning systems to maintain consistent temperature. Buses are programmed to keep the inside temperature at about 72 degrees in the summer and about 68 degrees in the winter. If a bus seems too hot or too cold, contact the CTA at 1-888-YOUR-CTA with the route, run number, direction of travel and time of incident.

Here comes the broom

Seeing as it's more difficult for the CTA to keep buses and trains clean in the wintertime because of the slush, don't add to the dirt with litter.

Riders soon may notice a change in the cleanliness of the CTA. Earlier this month, the transit board approved a three-year, $1.2 million contract with Progressive Industries for an environmentally friendly liquid cleaner to use on buses and trains and at CTA facilities.

The CTA said it will use MiraGreen instead of the five cleaners—two types of soap, a scrubbing cleaner, pine oil and an odor masking agent—the agency currently uses.

The change is expected to save the CTA about $177,000 annually. The agency said it spent $1.6 million in cleaning supplies last year.

Ride, don't slide

Be careful when running for trains. The Illinois Supreme Court ruled in July that the CTA isn't responsible for keeping platforms free of snow and ice, even in bad conditions. Use the train tracker displays, where available, to time commutes.

PRIVACY ISSUES

We asked RedEye's Facebook fans this question: When you use Facebook, how much do you think about your privacy/security? Here are some of the answers we received. Andrew Kent: People need to realize that Facebook has about as much privacy as a window booth in the red light district of Amsterdam and act accordingly.

Nadya Lebedeva: Because Facebook isn't exactly FORTHCOMING with all of their changes - I check my Privacy settings at least twice a month ... Also, UBER-PERSONAL things do NOT get posted... That's what txting is for Mando Florez: I agree with you Nadya, I check at my settings at least twice a month also but I try my best to do it once a week. Just found a hole that I had to fix today.

Cathy Konas: I don't post anything that I wouldn't want the world to see... although why the world would be interested in anything I post is beyond my ability to comprehend. :-)

Michael Andrews: This reminds me of a previous story you guys covered a few months ago. Privacy on the internet is hard to come by. Just make sure you update your settings and be cautious of what you say. You never know who's watching.

Lino Benitez: The only thing I keep in mind is that I won't post anything that's gonna get me fired from work. Or anything that's gonna hurt anybody's feelings. Other than that I don't really keep thinking about security.

Zach Morrison: Wait ... there is such a thing on Facebook? I gave up trying to keep up with that a long time ago.

Phil Melcher: My experiences with privacy on Facebook have been positive across the board.

FAMOUS FACES

GREAT MOMENTS IN FACEBOOK FLOPS

Facebook might have 500 million friends, but that doesn't mean they always get along. Here is a look at notable backlashes. COMPILED BY JIM WALSH

SEPTEMBER 2006

Facebook introduces News Feed and Mini-Feed features in which user information is streamed. After an outcry from users who say they can't control the updates, company founder Mark Zuckerberg apologizes personally. News Feed controls are announced shortly thereafter.

NOVEMBER 2007

Facebook announces an advertising partner server vice called Beacon that allows "users to share information from other websites for distribution to their friends on Facebook." Backlash is swift. The service is shuttered in 2009.

DECEMBER 2009

Facebook revamps privacy settings. The company releases a statement asking users to review their settings and notes that Facebook offers simplified privacy settings, control for particular functions and additional information on privacy settings.

LEAKING LINKS?

Facebook says it's committed to protecting users' data after reports of privacy breach involving FarmVille, other popular apps

CNN

Facebook issued a stern warning to independent developers Monday in response to reports that some applications on the site were sharing identifying information about users.

At the same time, a Facebook engineer said media coverage of the leak has exaggerated how much information can be, and has been, shared with third parties.

"Our policy is very clear about protecting user data, ensuring that no one can access private user information without explicit user consent," Facebook engineer Mike Vernal said on a blog used by people who develop apps for the site. "Further, developers cannot disclose user information to ad networks and data brokers.

"We take strong measures to enforce this policy, including suspending and disabling applications that violate it."

A report by The Wall Street Journal found that some of Facebook's most popular apps, including the game FarmVille by social network game company Zynga, were being used to share users' personal information with more than 25 advertisers and online tracking companies.

According to the Journal, the apps were sharing the unique Facebook ID numbers that are assigned to every user on the site and can be used to look up a person's name—even if that person has set all of his or her Facebook information to be private.

The report said Rapleaf, a data gathering firm, was able to link information from the apps to its database of Internet users, which could allow advertisers to create user profiles based on online information about the users.

In a blog post Monday, Rapleaf said sharing personal identifiers was a mistake. When informed of it last week, the company "immediately researched the cause and implemented a solution to cease the transmissions," the post said.

It also stated that as of last week, no user IDs were being shared via Rapleaf.

"We are committed to working with the industry to fix these issues, and all issues that may emerge in the future from this complex ecosystem," the post said. "Our mission is that everyone can have a personalized experience on the web that is safe and anonymous, and we will continue to work hard to make this a reality."

A user ID is a public part of any Facebook user's profile and can be used by any third party to access information the user has made public. But Rapleaf was linking that ID with other online information their browsers had found about the user, according to the Journal report.

It was unclear whether developers of many of the apps even knew they were sharing the information, the Journal said. Many apps, including Zynga's games, ask for some access to users' networks so users can share game play with their friends.

Zynga did not immediately return an e-mail from cnn.com seeking comment.

In Facebook's blog post, Vernal emphasized the small amount of data that can be collected simply with the user ID.

"Press reports have exaggerated the implications of sharing a UID," he said. "Knowledge of a UID does not enable anyone to access private user information without explicit user consent.

"Nevertheless, we are committed to ensuring that even the inadvertent passing of UIDs is prevented and all applications are in compliance with our policy."

In the past, Facebook has come under fire for what some users considered invasion of privacy by apps.

The site responded by tightening controls. Apps now must tell Facebook users exactly which information they want to access.

Last week, Facebook added two new security tools: the ability to get a temporary password when using a public computer and the ability to remotely check whether a user's account is being accessed somewhere else.

1 word for Facebook: overrated

Let's face facts: Far from a flexible social platform that allows people to expound upon their oh-so-interesting lives, Facebook is actually just another way for a small handful of people to make a lot of money from advertisers.

Facebook is a revenue-generating tool, not a cultural touchstone.

In "The Social Network," Jesse Eisenberg as [Facebook creator Mark] Zuckerberg continues to resist the appeals of his CFO to monetize the site, saying Facebook "is cool right now," and he doesn't want to jeopardize that.

Let me reassure everyone that Facebook stopped being cool sometime shortly after all our parents started getting accounts. Now, not only do you not need a ".edu" address to be a part of Facebook, you don't even have to be a person. Pepsi has a Facebook page, the Ford Focus has a page, even Trojan condoms has (have?) a Facebook page.

Facebook has become another obnoxious necessity of self-promotion. It's a platform to sell stuff. People once used it to sell themselves as personas, as the characters they wanted to be—who listed all their favorite books, picked out the perfect picture that made them look good but still casual and wrote prose poem rants in the "About Me" section. Now it's another job-hunting/networking tool that one must maintain like an e-mail account. It's just another marketing tool.

I mean, hell, that's what I use it for. Anyone who's still actually putting up drunk pictures of themselves and filling their pages with all their musical and film interests is a) resented by way more people than they're aware of, and b) exactly what Facebook loves because it gets to creep into your preferences and sell your tastes to the advertising hordes. It found a way to monetize the music, books and films you like, and you likely hardly batted an eye, so God knows what comes next.

Yet, the day is coming when pretty much everyone you know will have a personal website and a blog. Facebook served as the intermediary to that day. It may certainly make a boat-load of money year after year. It soon may prove as common a part of everyday life as having a home address or a telephone number.

But what it will not be is cool.

Wade fights for custody

NBA star testifies he feared for children's safety with ex-wife

Chicago Tribune

As his long day in court dragged on, NBA star Dwyane Wade surveyed the room full of lawyers and reporters hanging on his every word. Every once in a while, the typically stone-faced basketball star broke into a grin or laughed at the questions being hurled at him Monday by his ex-wife's lawyer.

"Some people would say that," the Miami Heat point guard responded when the lawyer for his ex-wife, Siohvaughn Wade, asked if he was a celebrity. The occasional quips lightened the mood in a Daley Center courtroom where the testimony delved into some ugly and personal matters.

The focus remained sharply on the fate of Wade's two boys, ages 8 and 3. Wade is seeking full custody.

On a second day on the witness stand, Wade told the judge he has feared for his two young sons' lives in the hands of his ex-wife, who attended most of the five-hour court session Monday but did not speak with reporters.

Wade, a native of suburban Robbins, testified that his ex-wife took his oldest son, who was complaining of headaches, to the emergency room in March. But she didn't notify him until a day later that the boy and his brother wouldn't be arriving in Miami as scheduled for a court-ordered weekend visit, he said.

"I got really afraid because I realized Siohvaughn ... is not the Siohvaughn I know now," he said of his former high school sweetheart.

Lester Barclay, the children's court-appoint representative, is advocating that Wade be given sole custody.

Later, under questioning by Michael Haber, the ex-wife's lawyer, Wade admitted that he played a basketball game the March night the children were supposed to arrive and that he'd never had any indication that his former wife was going to hurt herself or the children.

Candidates spar over mass pet euthanasia

Chicago Tribune

Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Brady on Monday said that if elected, he would veto legislation to give veterinarians authority to mass euthanize pets, a measure he caught political heat for sponsoring in the state Senate earlier this year.

"I realized the consequences associated with the legislation ... that the people of Illinois don't want it," Brady said.

The mass euthanasia of domestic animal legislation was among the first bills that Brady introduced after winning the Republican governor nomination in February.

Not long afterward, Brady handed off sponsorship of the measure to a Republican colleague in the Senate, saying Gov. Quinn was trying to politicize the issue. At a separate appearance at Chicago's Mercy Hospital, Quinn blasted Brady's prior explanation that he filed legislation for mass euthanasia of pets because a local veterinarian had asked for it.

The governor accused Brady of introducing the legislation because the "local gas chamber wanted to execute 10 dogs and cats at the same time."

Quinn said the Brady euthanasia legislation goes directly to the senator's overall judgment.

"He withdrew it because everybody in Illinois thought it was one of the worst ideas ever submitted to the Illinois General Assembly, and I think he ought to be accountable for it," Quinn said. "What kind of nonsense was he thinking when he even submitted the bill?"

Chicago police expand probe into alleged suspect beating by officers

Chicago Tribune

An investigation into allegations that a Chicago police sergeant was involved in beating a suspect has been expanded and six more officers also have been yanked off the streets, police said Monday.

"As part of this on-going investigation, a total of seven members of the Department have been relieved of their police powers and placed in administrative positions, pending the outcome of the investigation," said Lt. Maureen C. Biggane, a police spokeswoman.

Chicago Police Supt. Jody Weis spoke to reporters after an awards ceremony Monday. He said he wanted to make sure that the allegations were not taken lightly.

"The allegations are serious and that's why we stripped seven people of their police powers," Weis told WBBM (780-AM).

On Friday, Weis said a police sergeant was put on desk duty after the allegations surfaced. Today he told reporters that he wanted to let them know the matter was taken seriously.

"I know that would be news and that's why we want to get in front of this story," Weis said.

But again Monday, Weis refused to give any details about the incident and said that officials from the Independent Police Review Authority were in charge of the probe.

"Looking at the facts that were shared with us from the Independent Police Review Authority ... this was pretty egregious," he told the radio station.

Chicago sidestepped protocol on 911 deal

Chicago Tribune

City officials circumvented competitive bidding rules to steer a $23 million digital-radio contract to Schaumburg-based Motorola, according to City Hall's top watchdog and documents obtained by the Tribune.

Inspector General Joseph Ferguson concluded the officials at Chicago's 911 center falsified paperwork to justify giving the contract to a pre-selected firm. That company is identified as Motorola in documents obtained by the Tribune through an open records request.

Office of Emergency Management and Communications officials said using Motorola would preserve "the city's prior investment of nearly $2 million" in Motorola equipment bought earlier. But the city actually paid only $350,000 for that equipment, according to Ferguson's report.

The report went on to say that when investigators began asking questions, they had trouble determining "who was responsible, because of the debilitating combination at [Emergency Management] of high turnover, endemic finger-pointing, poor or non-existent internal controls and missing paperwork."

The agency justified not going through a formal bidding process in May 2005 when Ron Huberman was executive director. Huberman, a longtime lieutenant to Mayor Daley who now is chief of Chicago Public Schools, said Monday in a phone interview that he led the department for only 13 months.

EMANUEL PUSHES SCHOOL REFORM

Chicago Tribune

Rahm Emanuel wants to raise private money to fix public schools and continue the aggressive expansion of O'Hare. But he's not ready to address some of the other sticky issues he faces in his run for Chicago mayor.

The former fundraiser for Mayor Daley and architect of the Democrats' 2006 takeover of Congress is carefully controlling the early stages of his campaign to replace Daley. He hasn't made a formal announcement, instead opting for a listening tour designed to maximize photo opportunities.

When he sat down for an interview with the Tribune on Monday, he made it clear his goal was to pitch part of his education platform in advance of a weeklong tour of city schools. But he wasn't interested in addressing other issues ranging from his political history to his plans for the city's out-of-control budget.

"It's not that I don't want to tell you. I'm trying to talk about education. ... I'm not going to just lay out an entire year's worth of campaigning just in one interview," Emanuel said during an hourlong discussion at the Atwood Cafe just blocks from City Hall.

THE BLAGO CONNECTION

Rahm Emanuel said the upcoming trial of former Gov. Rod Blagojevich doesn't concern him, even if it begins as scheduled in January when the February mayoral race is heating up. Emanuel said testimony during Blagojevich's first trial showed he did nothing wrong even as he served as the point person between Obama's transition team and Blagojevich about whom Obama wanted to see as his Senate successor.

"Your job is to ask them all. My job is to try to control so that I can get part of my story ... since education is the No. 1 issue with the public, lay that out."

The recently departed White House chief of staff and former North Side congressman already is headlong into the campaign to replace Daley, who isn't seeking re-election in February.

In making his case, Emanuel said he would like to see a local, privately funded version of the federal education competition called Race to the Top, the signature Obama administration plan that rewarded states vowing to reform public schools.

Walgreens CFO arrested on suspicion of drunken driving

Chicago Tribune

Walgreen Co. Chief Financial Officer Wade Miquelon was arrested on suspicion of drunken driving last month, his second such arrest in a little more than a year, according to court records.

Miquelon, 45, of Winnetka, was stopped in a Jeep at 10:03 p.m. Sept. 25 in the 200 block of Sheridan Road in Kenilworth. Police ticketed him for having a taillight out, driving with a suspended license and driving under the influence.

He refused a Breathalyzer test and failed field sobriety tests, according to Kenilworth Police Lt. Phil Brunell and court records. A hearing is scheduled for Friday at the district courthouse in Skokie.

At the time of the arrest, Miquelon was on court supervision for a previous alcohol-related offense, according to court records. In September 2009, he was stopped at Green Bay Road and Glencoe Drive in Glencoe and ticketed for speeding, improper lane usage, driving under the influence and having alcohol in his system. On May 7, he accepted a one-year supervision for the latter offense and paid a $1,150 fine.

According to the ticket, Miquelon blew 0.126 percent on his Breathalyzer test. The legal limit is 0.08 percent.

"We're aware of it," said Michael Polzin, a spokesman for Deerfield-based Walgreens. "It's a personal matter, and we don't comment on personal matters."

Vatican blesses 'Simpsons'

7 LOS ANGELES Don't have a cow, man.

The official Vatican newspaper has declared that beer-swilling, doughnut-loving Homer Simpson and his son, Bart, are Catholics—and what's more, it says that parents should not be afraid to let their children watch “the adventures of the little guys in yellow.”

“Few people know it, and he does everything to hide it. But it's true: Homer J. Simpson is Catholic,” the Osservatore Romano newspaper said in an article published Sunday headlined “Homer and Bart are Catholics.”

The newspaper cited a study by a Jesuit priest of a 2005 episode of the show called

ARE THEY REALLY CATHOLIC?

“The Simpsons” executive producer Al Jean told Entertainment Weekly on Monday he was in “shock and awe” at the latest assertion, adding that the Simpsons attend the “Presbyterian” First Church of Springfield. “We’ve pretty clearly shown that Homer is not Catholic,” Jean said. “I really don’t think he could go without eating meat on Fridays—for even an hour.”

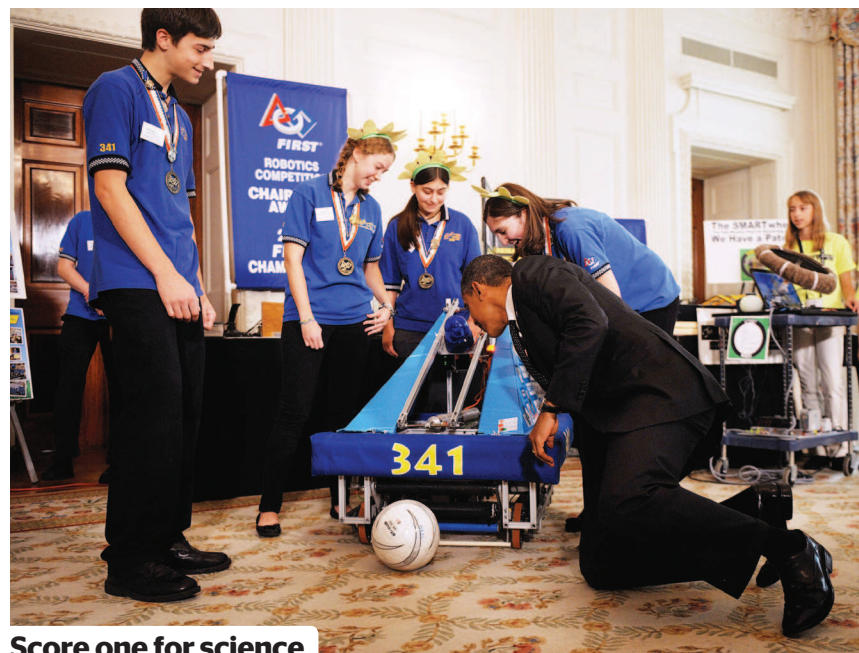

“The Father, the Son and the Holy Guest Star.” That study concludes that “The Simpsons” is “among the few TV programs for kids in which Christian faith, religion and questions about God are recurrent themes.”

The Simpsons pray before meals, and “in its own way, believes in the beyond,” the newspaper quoted the Jesuit study as saying.

It's the second time the animated TV series, which is broadcast in 90 countries, has been praised by the Vatican.

In December 2009, the Osservatore Romano described the show as “tender and irreverent, scandalous and ironic, boisterous and profound, philosophical and sometimes even theological, nutty synthesis of pop culture and of the lukewarm and nihilistic American middle class.”

Study: Polls suffer from cell phone bias

9 WASHINGTON Watching the polls to figure out who's up and who's down? Be careful. The poll may have a pro-Republican bias.

The ranks of Americans who use only cell phones have skyrocketed. Some public polls don't survey them, however, and they miss a group of people who are more likely to vote Democratic, including the young, the poor, Hispanics and African-Americans.

The nonpartisan Pew Research Center recently found that in four out of five national polls this year, polls that contact only those with land-line phones gave Republicans a 4- to 6-percentage-point edge over Democrats, compared with polls that included cell phones.

Collision recourse

NFL might start suspending players for hits to the head

Bloomberg News

The NFL might have seen one big hit too many.

After a particularly brutal Sunday, the NFL announced Monday that it may start suspending players for dangerous hits to the head to crack down on collisions such as the one that sidelined Philadelphia Eagles receiver DeSean Jackson. Or the Cleveland Browns' Mohamed Massaquoi. Or the Browns' Joshua Cribbs.

The list could go on.

Ray Anderson, the NFL's executive vice president of football operations, said Monday that the league may need more than fines to protect players from helmet-to-helmet collisions, or "flagrant" or "egregious" blows.

"We're going to circle back and take a more aggressive look at them because the events of yesterday were certainly disturbing to all of us," Anderson said. "We say it time [and] again: Player safety is our top priority and then you have a Sunday like yesterday where it seemed like every time

THE HIT LIST

Here's are some of the players who have been knocked out of part or all of a game this season after hits to the head:

- » Ryan Grant, Green Bay RB, Aug. 12
- » Kevin Kolb, Philadelphia QB, Sept. 12
- » Kevin Boss, N.Y. Giants TE, Sept. 12
- » Charly Martin, Carolina WR, Sept. 12
- » Aaron Rodgers, Green Bay QB, Oct. 10
- » DeSean Jackson, Philadelphia WR, Sunday
- » Joshua Cribbs, Cleveland WR, Sunday
- » Mohamed Massaquoi, Cleveland WR, Sunday
- » Chris Cooley, Washington TE, Sunday

you looked around, a player was on the ground for an extended period of time."

Anderson said the change could take effect immediately since it wouldn't involve a new rule but instead represent a "different emphasis" in enforcement.

Jackson and the Falcons' Dunta Robinson both were knocked out of their teams' game after a head-to-head collision. Pittsburgh Steelers linebacker James Harrison sidelined two players on the Cleveland Browns with head injuries.

Anderson said the league was determined to prevent such injuries. He mentioned the case of Darryl Stingley, a New England Patriots receiver paralyzed on the field by Oakland Raiders defensive back Jack Tatum in 1978.

"You're not talking about career-altering hits, these are potentially life-altering hits," Anderson said. "We don't want another Darryl Stingley."

Rodney Harrison, a Markham native and a retired Patriots safety, said fines never stopped him from overly aggressive play.

"You didn't get my attention when you fined me $5,000, $10,000, $15,000," Harrison, now an analyst with NBC, said on the pregame show for this week's "Sunday Night Football" telecast. "You got my attention when I got suspended and I had to get away from my teammates and I disappointed my teammates from not being there. You have to suspend these guys."

Noah's not the answer

Thinking caps on, Bulls fans. Now, use the same name, Carmelo Anthony or Joakim Noah, to complete all three of the following statements:

» "Carlos Boozer is out, but _____ can pick up the scoring slack until he returns."

» "With the game on the line, the Bulls have a terrific go-to option in _____."

» "LeBron James is going to have his hands full guarding _____ tonight."

Pens down. So, one answer makes the Bulls a contender. The other makes them a favorite.

Loathe as I am to admit it, King James and Miami are in prime position to rule the NBA for the next half-decade, maybe longer.

Meanwhile, a 26-year-old superstar who averages 24.7 points, 6.2 rebounds, 3.1 assists and 1.2 steals per game reportedly wants to play in Chicago. The hang-up? The team Anthony currently plays for, Denver, wants Noah in any potential deal.

As constructed, the Bulls are practically a lock to win about 50 games. Fantastic. They'll finish fourth—maybe third—in the Eastern Conference and likely get bounced in the second round of the postseason. Is that enough, Bulls fans? Are you content with being a tough out, but an inevitable out nonetheless?

I understand the reluctance to trade Noah. His energy is infectious, and double-doubles that include stout rebounding, which are becoming routine for the frizzy-haired center, are tough to come by. However, his contributions are not nearly as hard to piece together as Anthony's.

The '90s Bulls didn't exactly have Bill Russell clones at center, and they turned out OK. And with their own Big Three of Derrick Rose, Boozer and Anthony (provided he signs a contract extension), the current Bulls wouldn't need a dominant force at that position. They simply would need guys like Luc Longley, Will Perdue or Bill Cartwright—role players whose ultimate purpose it would be to pester Dwight Howard long enough to win playoff series.

The Bulls' productive offseason moves turned them into a threat, but it doesn't have to stop there.

With a bit more vision and guts, they can go from one of the many hunters to one of the few hunted.

OH, MARIAN

Hossa scores twice as Blackhawks win third straight

When the Blackhawks and St. Louis Blues tangle, there's usually one thing you can count on: hockey fights.

And it didn't take long for the two sides to square off Monday night. Just three minutes into the game, Bryan Bickell and David Backes mixed it up.

But that was about it for the heated rivalry. In fact, the teams let their play do the talking, for the most part. In the end, it took overtime to settle things at the United Center, with Patrick Sharp winning it on a nice pass from Patrick Kane with 1:10 left in the extra period, 3-2.

It took two goals from Marian Hossa to get them there, though. Down 2-0 in the third, Hossa continued his torrid scoring pace, scoring two goals in two shifts to tie the game at 2. He's now scored seven goals in seven games.

"This is unbelievable," Hossa said. "What can I say?"

The comeback gave the Hawks their third consecutive victory.

The Blues drew first blood with a goal from David Perron that trickled under Marty Turco. Perron scored again in the third on a three-on-one rush to the goal.

The rivalry between the teams has been heated in recent years and continues to grow more intense as the Blues improve.

"They're a physical team," Hawks winger Patrick Kane said. "We know if we can use our speed and play in their end ... and move the puck pretty quick against them usually you can catch them out of position. If we do that then we should get some chances."

FIGHT CARD

Bryan Bickell vs. David Backes

Backes got in the best shots and bloodied Bickell's forehead, but Bickell ended up on top in the end. It should be noted Bickell fought without his helmet; Backes fought with his helmet, which also had a visor. Weak.

WINNER: Draw

» Taj Gibson returned to Bulls practice Monday after sitting two games with a sore right heel. The team had termed his absence "precautionary." However, the disjointed nature of Bulls camp continued with Kyle Korver sitting out practice because of a cyst in his ankle.

» The White Sox are expected to announce the hiring of Pete Rose Jr. to their minor league staff once all hirings for the 2011 season are completed. Two team sources said Rose, 40, will manage at Rookie League-Bristol (Va.) of the Appalachian League.

» Bears cornerback Zack Bowman is expected to miss at least one game with a sprained right foot, according to a league source. Bowman had a noticeable limp and was in a walking boot when he exited meetings Monday afternoon. He suffered the injury during Sunday's 23-20 loss to the Seahawks.

» Texas 8, N.Y. Yankees 0 (Rangers lead series 2-1).

I hear Kim Kardashian is in town. Think she could be talked into sharing my doghouse with me? Here now, my picks.

1 L.A. Clippers vs. Sacramento
9:30 p.m. NBA TV
Kings 88, Clippers 72. New year, same crappy Clippers.

2 N.Y. Yankees vs. Texas
7 p.m. TBS
Yankees 6, Rangers 3. It's OK if you want to cheer for the Yankees, just don't tell anyone.

3 Washington vs. Boston
6:30 p.m. Vs.
Capitals 4, Bruins 0. Could be a good time for an Alex Ovechkin hat trick.

5 college dwellers tell us their fave spots to eat and drink—and we give their picks a twist

By Linda Hays

It's easy to fall into a drinking and dining rut when research papers and pop quizzes take precedence over finding new spots for post-class beer. We tracked down college students' fave go-to destinations and switched them up with fresh alternatives. For more, go to metromix.com.

Devin Norwood

22, Columbia College

Neighborhood: Edgewater

Go-to spot: Brando's Speakeasy, 343 S. Dearborn St.

Why: "It's a smaller space, so I can interact with my friends. Everyone's able to get together and have a good time—no one's going to judge you for being gay or straight. It is a mixed crowd of ages, cultures and races."

Favorite drinks: Cranberry vodkas and amaretto sours

Alternative: The blacked-out windows at M Lounge (1520 S. Wabash St.) may make it look mysterious from the street, but this comfy lounge has plenty of couches for kicking back with friends, plus super-sweet bartenders and dessert martinis such as the Nut Case ($10), a blend of vanilla vodka, amaretto, hazelnut liqueur, coffee liqueur and cream.

Ana Lopez

27, University of Chicago
Department of Medicine staff

Neighborhood:

Brighton Park

Go-to spot: Woodlawn Tap, 1172 E. 55th St.

Why: "It's low-key, cozy and friendly. A lot of people from [U of C] go there. The menu's good. It doesn't have a wide selection, just American food."

Typical order: Cheeseburger and Sam Adams

Alternative: Close to the lakefront and Promontory Park, The Cove (1750 E. 55th St.) is a loveable, nautically themed neighborhood bar where you can play a friendly game of darts or just chill with a drink by the jukebox.

Max Meczyk

21, DePaul University

Neighborhood: Lincoln Park

Go-to spot: R.J. Grunts, 2056 Lincoln Park West

Why: "It's a good place to take a [date], and it has reasonable food, good drinks and a prime location. It's very casual, so don't ever dress up."

Typical order: A burger with Swiss cheese and grilled onions

Alternative: Impress your date at Burger Bar (1578 N. Clybourn Ave.), which shakes up the typical burger routine with options such as the Les Urbain burger ($11) with brie, onion jam and dijonaise and green bean fries ($7).

Jesse Reynolds

18, UIC

Neighborhood: University Village

Go-to spot: Jim's Original, 1250 S. Union Ave.

Why: "I'm a grilled onion fiend, and they just have a mound of grilled onions [that] come on anything. ... You can see the people coming out of the bars and they need drunk food, so that's where they go."

Favorite order: Polish sausage with grilled onions, sport peppers and mustard

Alternative: The next morning after a late night out, Meli Cafe (301 S. Halsted St.) offers fresh alternatives to diner standards for breakfast and lunch. Abandon grease in favor of skillet and paninis.

Lottie Mikat-Stevens

19, Loyola

Neighborhood:

Rogers Park

Go-to spot: Thai Grill & Noodle Bar, 1040 W. Granville Ave.

Why: "It's a really quiet little restaurant and it's close to my dorm, so I go there a lot. They deliver and give free coupons for appetizers [with a $20 purchase]."

Favorite menu items: Pad Thai, pot stickers and bubble tea

Alternative: Pan-Asian fusion restaurant Blue Elephant (1235 W. Devon Ave.) offers Thai dishes with a European twist, such as spinach noodles in peanut sauce.

Wizard's wish list

Great wallop! A British tabloid recently reported how much Daniel Radcliffe is worth and—spoiler alert—it's a lot. Roughly the equivalent of 9,355,983 Galleons, 13 Sickles, 4 Knuts, according to some incredibly dorky calculations we did on beyondhogwarts.com. We decided to think up some ways for Harry Potter to spend this royal sum in the wizarding world.

Set up the Albus Percival Wulfric Brian Dumbledore Memorial Library

Harry would want to share Dumbledore's teachings with as many young witches and wizards as possible. Since Hermione Granger has read nearly all the books at Hogwarts, she'd eventually be made head librarian.

Expand Weasleys' Wizard Wheezes into an international chain

After all, Fred and George Weasley managed to start their Diagon Alley joke shop with only 1,000 Galleons. With Potter's fortune, they'd become almost as big as McDonald's.

Sponsor his own quidditch team

The wizarding game quidditch has been one of Harry's great passions since his first year at Hogwarts, so it's only natural that he'd want to sponsor his own team filled with dynamic players who aren't necessarily the greatest. The new line of Nimbus 2011 brooms must be out by now—and they're sure to be expensive.

Establish a wildlife refuge for magical creatures

Retired post owls, hippogriffs and dragons alike would find a home in the rolling country hills, watched over by Rubeus Hagrid. Sorry, no three-headed dogs allowed.

Better than 'Mad Men'?

Leave it to Time magazine to get all uppity about the ratings for "Mad Men," which ended its fourth season Sunday. The mag posted a story on its website Monday with the following headline: "Five Shows You Never Hear About That Are More Popular Than 'Mad Men.'" Here, in no particular order, are the mysterious shows that dare upstage Don Draper.

- » "NCIS," CBS
- » "Criminal Minds," CBS
- » "Pawn Stars," History
- » "Royal Pains," USA
- » "Wizards of Waverly Place," Disney Channel

Naked ambition

Kanye West has once again fired up his controversy machine, declaring over the weekend on Twitter that the cover art for his upcoming album, "My Beautiful Dark Twisted Fantasy," had been "banned." Who exactly "banned" the cover art, a painting that depicts West—who will appear Tuesday on "The Ellen DeGeneres Show"—on a couch with a naked phoenix, isn't exactly clear. The Los Angeles Times reported the decision had to do with potential reluctance to stock the album by major retailers such as Best Buy and Wal-Mart. Rest assured we haven't heard the end of this one.

Here we Coco

Conan O'Brien and TBS are gearing up for his new talk show by opening a peephole into the show's offices. The 24-hour "Live Coco Cam" launches at noon Wednesday at teamcoco.com/live and gives fans a look into the "top secret" Team Coco HQ. You can watch a special sneak peek at showpatrolTV.com. "Conan" premieres at 10 p.m. Nov. 8 on TBS.

Mike Tyson moment?

Mel Gibson might be working on an image reboot. While the studio hasn't confirmed it, ew.com reports that the struggling star will appear in "The Hangover 2" as a Bangkok tattoo artist. No word on whether a tiger will join him.

HOT DATE May 3, 2013

That's the release date for "Iron Man 3," according to variety.com.

"You mean the Smithsonian? You do not put works of historical magnitude such as that up for auction on eBay."

Zach Galifianakis to Playboy on whether the dingy-looking jockstrap he wore in "The Hangover" should be auctioned on eBay
